DEXA:

Each patient completes a questionnaire to determine risk factors for development of osteoporosis. The following risk factors were identified: Postmenopausal.

RESULTS:

The bone density of the lumbar spine from L-1 through L-4 measures 0.818 g/cm². This represents a value 69% that of a young adult. The T-score of -3.0 is consistent with osteoporosis. The fracture risk is high.)

The bone density of the right femoral neck measures 0.699 g/cm². This represents a value 67% that of a young adult. The T-score of -2.4 is consistent with osteopenia. The fracture risk is that of a normal control based upon bone density criteria alone.

IMPRESSION:

1. Osteoporosis.

2. The FRAX assessment of fracture risk gives 10 year probability of major osteoporotic fracture of 8.5%, for hip fracture 1.6%. Major osteoporotic fracture involves clinical spine, hip, shoulder, or wrist.
